In 2023, a team of intrepid cyclists will embark on an epic journey from London to Cape Town to raise money for Save the Children. This 12,000-mile adventure will test their limits and raise vital funds to help children around the world.

The cyclists will set off from London in March and will travel through Europe, Africa, and the Middle East before reaching Cape Town in December. Along the way, they will face a variety of challenges, including extreme weather conditions, difficult terrain, and cultural differences.

But the cyclists are determined to complete their journey and raise as much money as possible for Save the Children. The charity works in over 120 countries around the world to provide children with food, water, shelter, education, and healthcare.

The cyclists are asking for your support to help them reach their fundraising goal. You can donate to their JustGiving page at:

About the cyclists

The cyclists are a group of experienced adventurers who have all taken on long-distance cycling challenges in the past. They are all passionate about helping children and are determined to make a difference through their journey.

- John Smith: A 35-year-old father of two who has cycled across Europe and Asia.
- Jane Doe: A 28-year-old nurse who has volunteered with Save the Children in Africa.
- Peter Jones: A 40-year-old businessman who has always dreamed of cycling from London to Cape Town.

The cyclists are grateful for the support of their families, friends, and sponsors. They are all committed to completing their journey and raising as much money as possible for Save the Children.
