The Rawness of Emotion

Skaja's poetry is not for the faint of heart. It is a poetry of the body and the soul, a poetry that lays bare the raw nerves of human experience. She writes about love with a passion that is both intoxicating and terrifying, about loss with a grief that is both profound and overwhelming. In the Marrow

I want to be a storm
A tempestuous force
That blows through you
And leaves you breathless

I want to be a fire
A consuming flame
That burns through you
And leaves you glowing

I want to be a flood
A relentless torrent
That sweeps through you
And leaves you drowning

The Beauty in the Brutality

Despite the raw and often painful emotions that Skaja's poetry explores, there is also a profound beauty to be found within it. Her words are crafted with such precision and imagery that they resonate with a universal truth. Skaja's poetry shows us that even in the darkest of times, there is beauty to be found.

The Sun Still Rises

The sun still rises
Over the shattered ruins
Of our broken dreams

The birds still sing
In the trees that survived

The ravages of the storm

The world still turns

And life goes on

Even after the greatest loss

A Poetic Journey of Self-Discovery

Skaja's poetry is not only a reflection of human experience, but it is also a journey of self-discovery. Through her poems, Skaja explores her own vulnerabilities, her own strengths, and her own journey to find meaning in life.

Becoming

I am becoming more and more

The person I was meant to be

The person I am capable of being

I am shedding the layers

That no longer serve me

And embracing the truth of who I am

I am becoming stronger

More resilient

More compassionate

I am becoming the person

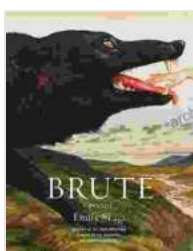

I was always meant to be
